Comments: 104 | Classification: 4.8/5 Base64 decoding for archiving using the free online decoder, which allows you to preview files directly in the browser, so as to download them, get the hexadecimal dump for any binary data, and get summary information about the original file. Please note that the Å preview is only available for text values and multimedia files known as images, sounds and videos. In any case, Å you can always convert Base64 to binary and download the result as a file, regardless of the MIME type. If you are looking for the reverse process, check File at Base64. What are the features of the decoder After decoding the string Base64, youÅÅ can: Preview the file (for example, an image or video player appears). Download the file by clicking on the special link. Read information about the original file (such as MIME type, extension, size). Analyze the file's hexadecimal dump. might be similar to this function save_base64_image($base64_image_string, $output_file_without_extension, $path_with_end_slash="") { //usage: if(substr($img_src, 0, 5) == "data:") { $filename=save_base64_image($base64_image_string, $output_file_without_extention, getcwd() . Reload to refresh the session. This is not exactly the scenario of the PO, but a response to those of some commentators. This is a solution based on Cordoba and Angular 1, which should be adaptable to other frames like JQuery. This gives you a Blob from Base64 data that you can store somewhere and refer from the client side javascript / html. It also answers the original question about how to get an image (file) from Base 64 data: The important part is the Base 64 conversion - Binary: base64ToBlob function (base64Data, contentType) {contentType = contentType ||';'; var cutter = 1024; var bytes Characters = atob(base64Data); var byetsLength = bytes Characters. length; var cutesCount = Math. ceil(bytes sLength / trance Size); var bytes Arrays = new Array(cutesCount); for (var cuteIndex = 0; cuteIndex
